

Compliance with EN 71-3 and Heavy Metal Content

Eska B.V. is committed to upholding the highest standards of product safety and regulatory compliance. In alignment with European Standard EN 71-3, which governs the migration of certain elements, all Eska products are routinely tested by accredited third-party laboratories to ensure safety and conformity.

Eska does not intentionally incorporate any substances listed as hazardous under applicable legislation. All chemical auxiliaries used in our manufacturing processes are sourced from reputable suppliers and are verified to comply with current regulatory requirements.

Eska does not deliberately introduce any heavy metal-containing substances into its products. However, due to the use of post-consumer recovered fiber as a raw material, trace amounts of certain elements may be present. These traces are inherently beyond our control and may vary slightly between production batches.

Over the past 30 years, based on long-term testing data and our stringent quality assurance protocols, Eska considers the presence of heavy metals, Substances of Very High Concern (SVHC), and ANNEX II substances in its products to be highly unlikely at levels approaching legal limits.

It is important to note that while some market participants may adopt stricter internal standards, such measures are only effective when substances are intentionally added. Trace elements that may be present due to the nature of post-consumer recovered fiber are not intentionally introduced and cannot be feasibly removed.

Eska remains dedicated to transparency, safety, and continuous compliance with all relevant environmental and product safety regulations.
